VA, SBA preparing to loosen rules on veteran ownership of small firms

Leney: “Expanded verification” needed to stop SDVOSB fraud

The Veterans Affairs Dept. and the Small Business Administration are working together on a joint rule loosening restrictions on veterans’ ownership and control of small businesses, a top VA executive said in a recent VA webinar.

Thomas J. Leney, executive director of VA’s Small and Veteran Business Program office, said the joint rule would align with “normal business practices” and would address the main reasons why veteran-owned firms are ruled ineligible for set-asides. It will be “much friendlier and more appropriate,” Leney said.

Several of the changes involve giving minority investors more of a say in the ownership and operation of service-disabled veteran-owned

Senate OKs budget, but not done

Congress faces Dec. 8 deadline to finish FY2018 spending bills

The Senate GOP majority approved a fiscal 2018 budget resolution that would cut Medicaid and Medicare and allow the GOP’s tax package to add as much as $1.5 trillion to the U.S. deficit.

The budget plan, if passed by the House, would allow “reconciliation” legislative procedures to be applied so that Senate Democrats could not filibuster upcoming GOP tax proposals. Filibusters require 60 votes to break.

The Senate budget resolution would need to be passed by the House to achieve reconciliation. Passage is uncertain because the House’s budget resolution did not allow for increasing the U.S. deficit.

The Senate plan would cut Medicare by $473 billion, and Medicaid by about $1 trillion, over the next 10 years.

There are $5 trillion in total cuts proposed over 10 years, but most are not specified.

It would set fiscal 2018 spending at fiscal 2017 levels for the year, but then reduce non-defense spending in subsequent years.

The vote in the Senate was 51 to 49, with no Democratic support. The Democrats said the bill would add to the deficit, cut Medicare and Medicaid and increase taxes for the middle class.

Congress still must approve the final appropriations for fiscal 2018 by Dec. 8 or risk a shutdown. A continuing resolution also is possible.

VA, SBA to loosen SDVOSB rules small businesses (SDVOSBs), to make it easier to attract such investors.

At the same time, the VA and SBA want to expand verification of the SDVOSBs' information to reduce fraud, Leney said.

Currently, there are 8,300 SDVOSBs verified by the VA for VA set-asides; and an additional 12,600 self-certified SDVOSBs that qualify for non-VA set-asides.

"Our research has found dozens of ineligible who are doing business with the government," Leney said. "We are exploring how to expand verification to all agencies to solve this problem."

Loosening restrictions

The VA and SBA are addressing several areas in which the ownership and control rules for SDVOSBs would be less restrictive, according to Leney.

- Minority-share owners would have a say in "extraordinary business decisions," such as decisions to shut down the business, add capital or change the business structure. The change is aimed at making it easier for the veterans to attract minority investors.
- "Split voting" would be allowed on the board of the SDVOSB. That generally means that as long as the majority of the votes on the board are veteran owner votes, the non-veterans can be a part of the voting process, and the company still would meet the requirement for eligibility, Leney said.
- The right of first refusal would be allowed for the minority owners. If the veteran owner wishes to sell the company to an outside investor at a set price, the minority investors would have the right to buy it at the same price.
- Transfer restrictions: Minority owners would be able to influence a transfer of ownership.
- The meaning of "control" would be modified. "The veteran has to be able to manage daily business operations, rather than also having to administer daily business operations. This enhances the ability to delegate," Leney said in the webinar.

- Licensing: Currently, if someone other than the veteran has a license needed for the SDVOSB, it is usually ineligible. Under the proposed joint rule, as long as the veteran owner has control over the firing of the license holder, the SDVOSB would be eligible.
 - The veteran owner would be allowed to accept full-time outside employment as long as the SDVOSB has no revenues and the job is not with the minority business partners.
 - Employment Stock Option Plans would be excluded from consideration of ownership.
 - Rules would be looser for non-veterans involved in management of the SDVOSB, as long as the veteran has ultimate control.
 - SBA Office of Hearings & Appeals would be in charge of certification appeals for SDVOSBs (See Oct. 6 edition of Set-Aside Alert).

for several more months.

However, the initial figures show a drop in small business contracting overall to 22.73%, down from 24.36% for fiscal 2016.

The data shows decreases for the percentage of awards won by small businesses owned by disadvantaged people, down to 8.58% from 9.5%; by women, down to 4.58% from 4.8%; and by small firms in HUBZones, down to 1.5%, from 1.67%.

Initial numbers show service-disabled veteran-owned small businesses won 4.06% of contract dollars in fiscal 2017, an increase from 3.98% the year before.

The figures appear on the Small Business Dashboard, which is part of Data.gov.

toms and Border Protection email address. CBP set up the email in March to allow questions.

The emails revealed "continuous confusion over the most basic details of the process - deadlines, page counts, how to submit bids, where to submit bids and so on," USA Today said.

The problems included:

- The initial solicitation of more than 130 pages asked for bids to be submitted in 12 days, while 30 days is more typical. Small business advocates said the 12-day turnaround was very difficult.
 - The government added 7 amendments during the 12 days containing hundreds of answers to questions.
 - Just before the deadline, CBP allowed an extra week for bids.
 - The initial solicitation was removed within hours. One of the new solicitations was issued in duplicate for no apparent reason.
- More information: <http://goo.gl/YVd2Ky> awards for fiscal 2017 totaled $84.1 billion out of total eligible dollars of $370.3 billion. Those numbers will rise slightly as additional awards are tabulated in the coming weeks.

Last year, small business awards totaled $100.1 billion from a total eligible of $410.8 billion.

While the fiscal 2017 numbers are preliminary, the downward trend in the share of small business contracts is likely to remain when the final results are tabulated.

That is because while total eligible contract dollars counted are currently at 90% of last year's total, the small business share currently is only 84% of last year's total. That suggests the proportion of small business awards will fall short in comparison to last year.

Column: Five practical tips to distinguish yourself with the OSDBU in 300 seconds

by John Hale III, founder and CEO, The Cornerstone Group LLC, and former director, U.S. Dept. of Energy Office of Small and Disadvantaged Business Utilization (OSDBU)

This is the third column in a series on strategies for engaging and leveraging the Office of Small & Disadvantaged Business Utilization (OSDBU). Today's article builds upon strategies referenced in the July 7 and July 28 editions of the Set-Aside Alert.

It is an understatement to say that today's federal government marketplace is very competitive and uncertain. The sheer number of firms and contract actions, in conjunction with the shifting political environment and lack of budget clarity, can lead to insomnia. An approach to mitigate these risks and challenges is to engage and cultivate relationships with a federal agency's OSDBU. The OSDBU serves as an influencer, connector and enabler of businesses winning government contracts.

Federal agencies sponsor a large number of industry days, conferences, matchmaking events and other outreach events. The OSDBU staff usually plays a leading role in the planning and execution of these events. Unfortunately, these events can seem overwhelming or appear to be a "cattle call" from industry's perspective. Likewise, it can be difficult for an OSDBU team to focus on your company and what you provide. The following are five practical steps companies should utilize to focus OSDBU attention. They are straightforward; however, they are not put to use by many companies.

Be Specific

Define why you are targeting specific outreach events, agencies, their mission(s) and contract opportunities. It is essential your answer moves beyond the basics, i.e., that the agency maintains a large budget, is politically popular, your competitors work there, etc.

Additionally, what is your specific ask of the OSDBU team and how are you making it easy for them to assist you?

Refer to the previous articles for strategic approaches to uncover agency challenges and current priorities.

Customize your elevator pitch and capability statement

This step is the number one way to distinguish yourself in 300 seconds. Based on my experience, approximately one-in-twelve (8.3%) of businesses invested the time and effort to customize their firm's expertise to the Energy Department. Forwarding a standard and generic capability statement or marketing materials is a quick way to the bottom of the pile. Accordingly, distinguish yourself by:

- Demonstrating and stating how your firm's expertise is in alignment with the agency's mission(s), and/or with specific contract actions. Highlight past performance inclusive of federal, state, local and commercial sectors.

- Passing the "at a glance test." This means your conversation and language should be concise and your materials succinct and not cluttered with non-essential information. Remember that at an outreach event the OSDBU team will meet dozens of firms and have only a couple of minutes (at most) to focus on you and your company.

- The elevator pitch and materials should indicate your proposed solutions to the agency's challenges. Most people will appreciate you invested the time to understand some of their challenges and to craft a proposed solution.

Business Cards

A major frustration, as a former OSDBU director, is meeting a talented business owner at an event, with an unusable business card. This significantly hindered my ability advocate on their behalf. Therefore, do not use business cards with the following characteristics:

- Avoid laminating your business cards because it makes them very difficult to write on.

- Avoid having no available space on your card. This prevents the OSDBU and others from writing notes on your card to follow-up on your behalf.

- Avoid a picture of people on your card (my personal preference). This is a distraction and your looks and appearance are not usually factors in winning additional contracts.

Strategic Alliances

Strategic alliances are mutually-vetted relationships with a commitment to collaborate for both parties benefit, with the goal of winning additional contracts. These are firms that complement and enhance your services or products. For instance, the strategic alliances could be with mentors or protégés; with firms in socioeconomic categories other than your own; or with companies in other states or countries. The strategic alliances should address the targeted agencies' mission(s) and contract actions.

Resources - Appear bigger and mitigate federal risks

Focus on communicating and demonstrating your firm's access to additional financial support (line of credit, grants, etc.), people (technical expertise and capacity) and products or services. Federal customers view scalability of their contractors as a key component of mitigating their risk - perceived or actual.

John Hale III is founder and CEO of The Cornerstone Group, LLC (TCSG) a consultancy that provides strategic advice for businesses to achieve their near- and long-term goals and win additional contracts/grants. Mr. Hale also serves as vice president of the National Contract Management Association, Bethesda Chapter. Prior to founding TCSG, Mr. Hale served as the U.S. Energy Department's OSDBU Director and the U.S. SBA's Deputy Associate Administrator for Capital Access.
